

Once upon a time, in a small town in India, a boy named Eurus was born. Eurus was a bright and cheerful child who always carried a smile on his face. From a young age, he was known for his kind heart and gentle demeanor, making him well-loved by everyone in his community. Eurus had a special talent for singing. His voice was melodious and soothing, and he could effortlessly hit the right notes. Despite his exceptional talent, Eurus never pursued singing professionally. He disliked the idea of singing for others and felt that his passion for music was a personal joy. Instead, he would often retreat to his room, close his eyes, and lose himself in the music, finding solace and happiness in the melodies he created.

Growing up, Eurus was also an avid cricket fan. His love for the game began when he watched his first cricket match, the historic India-Pakistan final. He vividly remembered the moment when Sreesanth took the catch that sealed India's victory. The excitement and euphoria of that day stayed with him, igniting a lifelong passion for cricket.

In the years that followed, Eurus became a dedicated follower of the Indian Premier League (IPL). He initially supported the Chennai Super Kings (CSK), captivated by their dynamic gameplay and the charisma of their captain. However, five years later, his loyalty shifted to the Royal Challengers Bangalore (RCB), a team he found equally compelling and exciting.

As time went on, Eurus's interests evolved. By 2019, he had developed a strong affinity for the England cricket team. Despite his roots, he found himself more drawn to England's style of play and sportsmanship. The internal politics within the Board of Control for Cricket in India (BCCI) had disillusioned him, leading him to support England even above his home team.

When Eurus was 21, he experienced one of the happiest and saddest moments of his life. He adopted three lovely kittens who quickly became his companions. They brought him immense joy with their playful antics and affectionate purrs. Tragically, one of the kittens drowned while playing near a water source. The loss devastated Eurus, marking the saddest day of his life. The incident left a profound impact on him, but it also strengthened his bond with the remaining two kittens, who became even more precious to him.

Eurus's academic journey was marked by perseverance and hard work. He studied at JV School until the 12th grade, achieving commendable scores—84% in his 10th grade and 64% in his 12th. He then went on to graduate from PHC, laying a solid foundation for his future endeavors.

In 2024, Eurus's dreams took flight when he received an invitation to visit London, England—his favorite country. The opportunity to explore the land he admired so much filled him with immense joy. The moment he set foot in London, he felt an overwhelming sense of happiness and fulfillment. It was a dream come true, a culmination of years of admiration and love for the country.

Eurus spent his days in London soaking in the culture, visiting iconic landmarks, and attending cricket matches. He cherished every moment, knowing he was living his dream. The trip was the happiest period of his life, a testament to his journey from a small town in India to the bustling streets of London.

Through it all, Eurus remained true to himself—a good kid with a passion for music and cricket, whose dreams and determination led him to experience the joys of his beloved England.

Despite the highs and lows, Eurus's story is one of resilience, passion, and the unwavering pursuit of his dreams.